We were under the impression that, whatever had been done between Part Said and Su z, the latest reports previous to the present as a did not bint that the completion of the great enterprise was approaching. It was true that M. the Lessens, when he invited delegates from the European Chambers of Commerce to inspect the works in the beginning of April last, asserted that | the communication was open between the two sens: " and that "in 24 hours we have sailed. b wed by a steamer, from one sea to another." But in the month of April last there was no prospect of either canal being adapted for some time for the transmission of any considerable traffic. The Cavaliera Bagio, Caranti, Commissory of the Italian Government, enters into very minute details their condition. To navigate the maritime ennal between Ismalia and Port Said, they left Ismalia "in a number of small covered bosts. which would not conveniently hold more than 6 or 8 persons each, towed by camela." The project of the canal included the conversion of Lake Timesh into a great internal part, but he found of all this these was no appearance of commencement. All that M. de Lesseps in the meantime contemplated as practicable, by means of them was a provisional hoat service, but there was not vot established between them the necessary communication. Owing to the difference of level Houses, Lands, Tenements, &c. locks were required at Ismaila, and the construction of locks had not then been begun. Locks would also be required at Sucz to establish communication with the sea, and at that point also there was a length of two kilometres to make of the fresh-water canal. There locks at Suez had only been begun. We presume that what is means by the onening of "the floodgates of the canal" is the completion of these locks, enabling a cani-laden vessel of unknown dimensions to pass from sea to sea. But we shall look for a more detailed report with some degree of interest, and affording a nice view of the harbour. Rent Mr. Caranti was of oninion that so much would i moderate. have to be done, that the provisional boat service could not be in operation before the 1st Jan. 1864. If the boat acrvice is now practicable, the works must have been pushed on with gratifying energy. The fact, however, would scarcely be so startling | Central as to justify the enthusiastic telegram that has been sent. It is stated that the company have entered into contracts for the completion of the ship canal by the lat of July, 1869, so that we have nearly three years to wait, at least, before we read that the great work is accomplished. M. Caranti, and the other delegate we have quoted. are both of opinion that much longer time will be negresary, the latter hinting at 20 years instead of three; at any rate, the company are endeavouring, by enormous dradging machines and other engines, to supply the lack of the forced labour of which they have been deprived. The Allied Fleets at Cherbourg. The entertainment of a British fleet in a French arbour on the fate day of the French Sovereign would once have been considered at porten, and is still aphenomenon. Happily the prognostic foretells ing a frontage of Eighty three feet on Wellington nothing but good. When France and England and Gage Streets and of two bundred and twenty are of one accord the affairs of the world are like- nine feet on Aberdeen Street, comprising a suly to run smoothly; and there is something, indeed, significant in the telegrams which actually follow the announcement of this naval, visit. Austria and Prussin, we are told, are beginning to understand one another, and to lay uside their thoughts of quarrel. Spain justifies her recognition of the Italian Kingdom, and throws her influence into the scale of liberty and peace. Europe is naturally attentive to this proceeding of the Western Powers. It is not a parade of strength, or a symbol of defience, but it is a demonstration of concord, and of a material identify of interests. The spectacle at Cherbourg is all the more remarkable from its special and limited character. Time was when we should have taken alarm at any naval display of our neighbours, and 1710 Let situated on the Caine Road West, a almost resented any pretensions to maritime power | L. We now look at these things differently, and are disposed to take the sum of the two navies, instead of the difference between them, as the available power for insuring peace and order. that our best ships are absent. With the exceptien of the Achilles—s specimen quite unique—no British vessel at Cherhurg is to be regarded as the model of her class, and some classes of our modern navy are not represented at all. We have sent but five ironalads across the Channel. There are the Black Prince, as besatiful a looking ship as the best of our sailing frigates; the Royal Sovereign, and experimental turnet ship ; and the Archilles, Hector, and Defence—three vessels carrying on a Stor keepers and Auctioneers buwhich are certainly not pleasing to the eye at first. siness. We have sent no specimen of the Minotaur class, supposed, though, perhaps, erronemialy, to be an maravement on the Warrior model; no specimen of Mr. Road's new vessels, expected to surpass all precedents in strength and power; no specimen of WITH immediate possession. Nevertheless, the display is imposing, and as the eye rest upon the long black hulls of these modern lighting ships, an impression of power grows rapidly upon the mind. The French ironelade, at least the two-deckers, are strongly contrasted with the models of former days indeed, it is more the ram than anything else which gives novelty and ungainliness to the new shins of war. It is not to be forgotten, however, in looking at the combined squadrons, that not a single model of either fleet has ever been tried in battle. we know at least this, that every vessel in use of the Wharf now completed, where ressels the line can keep the sea, and is competent can be ladened and discharged.

the end, we have come to look upon any international festivity almost as a thing of course, even when it takes the unusual form of a mutual naval visit. It is a great thing to unlearn national jeanunics and to get rid of the idea that the strength if one country must mean the weakness of another. We may look with advantage on the French ships, and they may examine ours with as much benefit. Hitherto there has been a certain mystery made of these things, although modern us-val architecture is still only in its experimental stage. It deserves to be remembered by all who gaze upon this instructive spectacle, that though ron-clad ships have now been introduced for some six or seven years, nobody yet knows what s the true model for an ironalsd, nor even whether a fighting ship anght really to be alad in iron at all. The French Solferino bears no resemblance to the British Black Prince; the American Dunderherg is not in the least like either. Even in our own dockyards the vessels we are building are entirely different from the vessels we have ful, the Achilles is a mistake as our clever neighbours will soon discover ; and if Mr. Laird's Wyvern is metched with Mr. Reed's Research, we comparison. As to the Americans, it is very re-
